Do You Prepare Your Potatoes Economically?

Potatoes are cheap and essential part of our daily diet, and yet, if we do not prepare them in the right manner, they will often prove a very costly item. I have been cook for a family of eight for many years, and have prepared potatoes in over three hundred ways. The experience was worth a great deal, and I learned a great many little economies which even the average housewife may, or may not, know.

There was a little bride the house next door to us who didn't know all the economies of preparing potatoes, and one day she came to me with a blue and white kitchen, she exhibited a pair of very badly stained hands from peeling potatoes and exclaimed,

"That's what comes from peeling potatoes!" I replied, "I don't think so. I took a large potato and then at her porcelain garbage pail, which stood on the drain board. Inside this pail there was a pile of potato skins that stood up straight and were really (no exaggeration) a quarter of an inch in thickness. I smiled.

"My dear child," I said, pointing to the pile, "why don't you boil the potatoes in their jackets? You won't have discolored fingers if you did this, and you wouldn't be removing half the potato as you are now doing. Why, the best part of the potato lies next to the skin."

She looked at me with a blank expression, whether I cooked, fry, bake, or steam them.

"I boil them in their jackets, whether I cook, fry, bake, or steam them. I boil them in their jackets until they can be peeled, then I remove the skins and boil them again. If I finish them in the oven, I grease them all over with butter, and bake them in a very hot oven, and they come out nice as can be." In this way I taught a young housewife how to save money, and this is quite a saving when you consider that every minute the gas fires away is money spent, and why spend it needlessly?

The other another thing I have always noticed about baking potatoes, and that is the difference between a wet-skinned and a dry-skinned potato. I have found that the wet-skinned potato takes out dry soap, while the dry-skinned potato is fifty and light. The reason is as plain as a pikestaff: when you recollect that starch requires a strong heat and short time to cook, the wet-skinned potato is not hot enough to bake it, and the oven has not heat enough to bake it properly.

No potato has ever gone to waste in my kitchen. Little potatoes that are too small for the table, I mash or add to my bread dough. Somehow, a bread without potatoes mixed in it doesn't have the same taste as one that does. If you do not use them in your bread dough, make croquettes of them.

Old potatoes, that have been in the ice box for two or three days, I rejuvenate by boiling them in water, or in cold water. Just before using them I put them into boiling water to which a handful of salt has been added and peel them very quickly. The peels do not go to waste. I boil them thoroughly, and use them later for kindlings.

All these little potato economies may seem trivial to the average housewife, but it is the saved heat and the oil saved that the housewife can afford. Potatoes can be an economical or an expensive dish—it's up to the cook!

Season and Serve.

Memorial day is chosen as the time of remembrance for those who fought and fell in the service of their country. It has been set aside for more than half a century as a time to honor those who gave their lives or offered their services in the Civil War.

The American nation turned the tide in the World war—but how did America come to be a nation? Through the blood and sufferings of the men who went out to fight, to fight for freedom.

Had the lead been divided between North and South, a further division between East and West might well have been the next step, and after that—who can say? Instead of being an example of the strength and prosperity which go with union, America would have been little more than a second and weaker Europe, unable and unwilling to take a decisive place in the contest that decided the fate of the world.

"Tramp, tramp, tramp, the boys are marching," The poppies of Flanders fields bloom in triumph now because the boys marched 60 years ago. They are boys no longer. Beards are white fairly and squarely.

The soup bones have never reached the dinner table, but pass over to a chafing dish, which may explain why young girls, enticingly decorated for the role of cook with tiny, white, ruffled-and-face-trimmed aprons, have no interest at all.

The handkerchief-size apron of dotted Swiss, with ribbons bows on the pocket, may pass as a cooking apron, but it is not a man's, but a grown old and gray with his wife's widow's weeds in the apron that is large and plain, and made of checked gingham.

If the most dismal dinner is of the kind that the cook can, he cares not who did the cooking.

No left-over meat can be so carefully doctored and disguised that the man does not detect that they are left-overs. The man who loves his wife appears a second time he loudly grumbles, and the third time he refuses to eat it. Moral: The housewife, who would be thrifty and at the same time please her husband, must not consider thrift when planning the meat course.

A good plan when chickens are high is to save chicken fat, which doesn't necessarily taste chicken.

A wife should occasionally have chicken for dinner, when there are no guests, so that her husband, who carves, may have a favorite part without lacking in politeness.

Dumplings served with chicken are delicious, but they are as eloquent as wrinkles in a woman's face in comparison of the greater amount of gravy.

Table martyrs are no longer in vogue; women, these days, do not assume a preference for the backbone of the chicken, or the reason that their husbands may have the choice.

The most satisfactory fish cook is the woman whose husband never dropped a hook and line in the water. The man who is a fisherman and cooked it over a camp fire sees no virtue in the manner in which his wife cooks it.

The principal difference, in a country town, between spinach and dandelion, lies in the grocer's bill.

Scalloped Squash and Potatoes.

Sift through a colander a quart of tomatoes, and add the following seasonings:

One tablespoonful of finely-chopped onion; one teaspoonful of salt; one-half a tea-spoonful of white pepper; four whole cloves and four peppercorns. Rub together two tablespoonsfuls of flour, with two tablespoonsfuls of water, or of a substitute, and cook the whole, stirring carefully, until the mixture boils. Put a layer of squash from a quart can of the bottom of a greased baking dish, cover with a layer of tomatoes, prepared tomato, and proceed to fill the dish with alternate layers of squash and tomato until it is nearly filled. Cover the top with a thin layer of buttered crumble, and bake half an hour in moderate oven, or until the vegetables are hot through and the crumble well browned.

Some Cake.

One of the biggest birthday cakes ever baked was cut on February 14, celebrating the thirty-ninth birthday of a large department store in Iowa town.

The cake was five feet high, and weighed 1,441 pounds. Architecturally it was a gem and as appetizing looking as a paradise. The great mountain of sweetmeats stood in the form of honor on the first floor of the store, admired by all, and was cut and distributed among the patrons of the store during the week.

It took the baker and his corps of assistants exactly five days to bake the cake, and one day and one-half to assemble and decorate it. The ingredients that went to make this huge culinary product are:

167 dozen of eggs

92 pounds of butter

125 pounds of flour

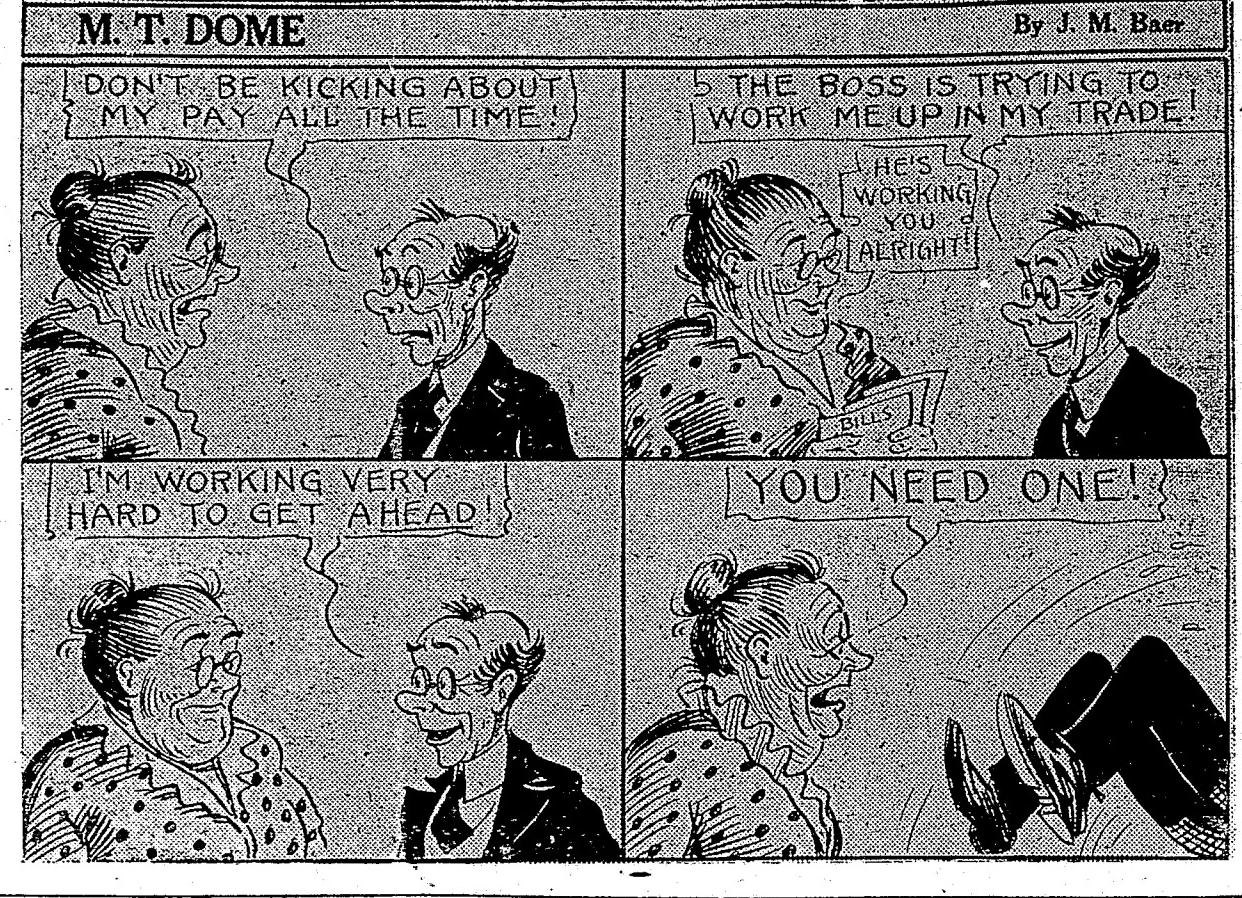

1 gallon of vanilla

550 pounds of sugar

5 pounds of baking powder

410 pounds of flour

Crystal vases often become discolored when they have been frequently used to hold flowers. The dark stains may be removed by soaking the leaves in vinegar and scrubbing with them.
